What happens in cases of clinical urgency?

Very rarely a child or young person may need to be seen more quickly than usual because of worries about their immediate safety. For example, where a young person has an acute eating disorder or they have acute suicidal ideas and plans. In such situations the young person should visit their local GP or A&E department as with any other concerning health problem. Here their condition will be assessed and a referral made to CAMHS if required. CAMHS prioritise individuals in these circumstances.

NHS Leeds Community Healthcare is responsible for providing healthcare services in the Leeds area and is hosted by Leeds Primary Care Trust (NHS Leeds)

What is Leeds CAMHS?

Leeds Child and Adolescent Mental Health Service (CAMHS) offers assessment and help to children and young people with significant emotional and behavioral difficulties (for example anxiety and depression and eating disorders) and their families.

We work across the Leeds area in community based teams and try to meet with families in a place near to where they live.

What do we offer?

Once a referral has been received and accepted, families are usually seen in a consultation clinic. In this clinic you and a CAMHS clinician will work together to think about the difficulty and what or who might help. For many families these two or three sessions are all that's needed.

If you need more help following these sessions we can offer what we call follow on work.

This might be:

- individual therapy
- family therapy
- group work (e.g. parenting groups and group psychotherapy)

- specialist clinics (e.g. eating disorders clinics)
- specialist assessments (e.g. for ADHD and Autistic Spectrum Conditions).

For a very small number of young people, highly intensive assessment and treatment packages are needed. Leeds CAMHS has both intensive outreach and inpatient services. Children and young people offered this will have had significant previous input from within our service.

How do I get help for my child?

Many children and young people experience emotional (and associated behavioural) problems at some point in their childhood. There are lots of people you already know who may be able to give you advice about what to do. These include the learning mentor at school, your child's GP, school nurse or their health visitor.

A referral to CAMHS would be appropriate if, despite advice and input by you and professionals you already know, the problems continue and have a big effect on daily life for you or your child.

We accept referrals of children and young people under the age of 18 years.

The following are some of the people who can refer your child: your child's GP, their health visitor or their school nurse.

For a more complete list of the professionals who can refer to our service please see our website www.camhs.leeds.nhs.uk.

What about families who need extra support to access your service?

We aim to make sure that all children, young people and families can access our service. It would be really helpful if you can remind the person who is referring you of any special requirements your family may have, such as disabled access, reading, hearing or languate needs.

How long is the waiting list?

Referred families are seen within the national target of 13 weeks; many are seen earlier.
